If you've been following The Magicians on Syfy, you may have heard that they recently greenlit the debut season of a spin-off, The Magician King, based off of the novel series by Lev Grossman. The episode count has also been upped from 13 to 16, with a 2018 premiere date being announced. The series is executive produced by stars John McNamara (Star Wars: The Clone Wars, Doctor Who) and Sera Gamble (Supernatural, Person of Interest), who also serve as co-showrunners. Grossman first introduced The Magicians and its characters in his 2007 novel of the same name. The series follows Quentin Coldwater, a high school student at Brakebills University, along with several magical apprentices. The series gained a dedicated fanbase as well as a TV audience when it launched on Syfy in 2016. Both the novel and the series have garnered positive attention from fans of fantasy fiction for their realistic depiction of students and professors in a school of magic. The novels, however, are a bit different from the TV show, as the novels mostly center around Quentin's time at Brakebills and his interactions with the Brakebills students and professors, while the series focuses on the characters' adventures after graduating. The announcement for The Magician King coincides with some big plans for the upcoming season of The Magicians. First, a live episode of The Magicians will be broadcast on May 11th, and the series will add a special midnight screening in every city (outside of New York City) for all fans. Then, as announced on the show's official website, The Magicians will be returning
