The present invention relates to a rearview mirror particularly for a vehicle, consisting of a mirror housing and an adjusting device, which housing is adapted to be secured in a vehicle front window with an elongated attachment strap which is connected to a cover disk which is fastened to the window glass and has a pin extending through it, on its back side. Rearview mirrors are, of course, known which consist of a mirror housing or base and an adjusting device for adjusting the reflection direction of the mirror. Generally, such mirror housings are connected with each other by means of an attachment strap extending over the mirror housing and the rear window of the vehicle. The attachment strap has an attachment eye or loop at its free end which can be clipped in a hook or eye of the mirror housing. With a conventional rearview mirror, the adjusting device, which is generally attached by screwing, is likewise connected with the mirror base by means of an attachment strap. In a rearview mirror of the type described above, i.e., in a conventional rearview mirror, one can see the strap which connects the mirror base with the attachment eye of the attachment strap. In order to eliminate this strap, it has already been proposed to omit this strap and to adjust the rearview mirror by means of the attachment eye. However, the great disadvantage of this design is that the mirror housing and the adjusting device are not connected with each other by an attachment strap, so that, if only the attachment eye is provided, the adjusting device cannot be held securely in position if, during a later accident, the mirror housing or the attachment eye comes loose. This also can occur if one wants to disassemble the rearview mirror for maintenance purposes. UNPUBLISHED UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FOURTH CIRCUIT No. 04-2125 ZORAAD SALEB,
