Vilma Registry Explorer is a powerful tool that helps to easily navigate and find items in the registry. The application was created in order to assist those who wish to have greater control over their PC's registry. Among other features Vilma Registry

Explorer includes the ability to save your work in a "cloned" registry or to back up/restore it. It allows to edit the name, path, type, value and size of registry keys. It is also possible to navigate through the registry without using any folders that enables to easily find the keys. The application has an intuitive and straightforward interface and its design allows for an easy and uneventful usage. There are some drawbacks though. While Vilma Registry Explorer can free you from navigating through the registry manually it does not enable you to rename the keys. specific items. Since Vilma Registry Explorer is not a full-fledged registry viewer it does not allow working with serial numbers, GUIDs, icons, printers, and registry keys that work as shortcuts. Some people complain that Remove Existing Records fails to do what it is supposed to do. They say that there are many times when they want to just remove records without replacing them - like removing duplicate lines of code or the junk files in the C:\documents and settings\userName\Local Settings\Application Data\ folder. But when you use Remove Existing Records utility to achieve this task, you may be surprised at the fact that it fails to remove all the files you want. Such a scenario is possible when you have made a backup of the user's profile. When you restore this backup to the same machine where you performed the original batch job, the backup copies will be placed in the right place but the data that was already there won't be erased.

Some other scenarios where the Remove Existing Records utility might fail are when you have not given the application proper access to the source directory and this directory has a heavy database. These are the most likely causes of the tool's failure to perform its task. An auto backup tool that should be an essential
