This is especially true for friendships in which we have ongoing, constant contact, which makes it harder to establish a deep connection in the beginning. However, I think that even if a friendship starts out as shallow, it can eventually become deep if you both put forth the effort. In a previous post, I talked about how you need to be authentic when you're in the very beginning stages of getting to know people. Of course, you want to know if they're genuinely interested in you, and more importantly, that they're someone you can trust. One way to help tell the difference between fake interest and actual interest is by asking questions that mean something to you. Some questions that tend to work are: What was your favorite subject at school? What's the funniest thing that's ever happened to you? What movie do you have on your favorite list? What kind of music do you like to listen to? What's a common hobby that you've had that you enjoy? What's a common goal that you've had that you can connect to? What personal qualities do you like the most and least about yourself? What are some funny stories you could tell about yourself? Is there one talent that you have that you're especially proud of? What's your favorite subject in school? What's the topic you in the pathogenesis of many human lymphoproliferative

malignancies.

However, the precise molecular mechanisms responsible for apoptosis in
lymphoproliferative
disorders have not been well defined.

Recently, the B-cell
receptor signalosome
has been shown to play a key role in the regulation of apoptosis in B cells.

The signalling molecules of this pathway are members of the immunoglobulin superfamily (IgSF) and the CD19/CD81 and CD19/CD21 signalling complexes. We have investigated the expression of two surface proteins of the

CD19/CD81 and CD19/CD21
complexes, M48B5
and H19-1. These proteins are members of a subgroup of the IgSF, the ligands of which are involved in signal transduction.

All of the B-cell
chronic lymphocytic leukaemias and
myelomas
investigated expressed these proteins on the surface membrane and, on average, expressed levels of M48B5 and H19-1 that were two- to fourfold greater than those of normal B cells. These studies demonstrate that there are many similarities between the two B-cell chronic lymphocytic leukaemias and myelomas studied,
