Those who didn't get the iPhone 6S had better luck with the iPhone 8 from September 2018., Android Open Source Project (AOSP) is a full-source Linux-based operating system created by Google and open.Q: Does AOP in Spring generate extra code? I'm using Spring 3.1.1 for a web application. Now I was wondering how AOP is implemented in Spring. I think Spring AOP keeps track of the methods by a "metadata" and then it actually calls the original methods. Does this mean that I get additional code for AOP (such as the annotations and the call to invoke())? So, does Spring AOP increase the size of my web app, or just the size of the WAR file? Update After @pat's answer, I compared the class dumps of my web application before and after enabling AOP by adding the @AspectJ annotations on my code. I found a significant increase in the class size of my application: 40.6K => 38.6K I did not change any AOP-related configuration option, or put any code in an AspectJ pointcut. A: No, nothing is going to generate extra code. You are "lucky" that the JVM's overhead is only in the header/footer of each class (and some of those). But they are small. The largest source of overhead is going to be in the container, not the AOP. AOP is meant to keep code out of your classes. It doesn't mean you can't have some classes
