Our data show that human breast carcinomas often lack transforming growth factor (TGF)-beta-inducible Snail, a transcriptional repressor of epithelial genes that promotes cell migration and invasion. Treatment of MCF10A cells with TGF-beta1 was associated with down-regulation of Snail, and TGF-beta1 was able to trigger a gene expression program in MCF10A cells that led to invasive growth. Epidermal growth factor (EGF) and TGF-beta caused Snail down-regulation and promoted cell migration in MCF10A cells. In contrast, EGF and TGF-beta together inhibited cell migration, indicating that Snail is an important mediator of cell migration.
