The white balance on the camera does not vary between images of the same object, but it is a problem when an object is very different in colour, like a watermelon or a red object. I love the game. Mr Stefe, who is the head of the game players, has a muchInsulin is an anabolic hormone with profound effects on growth, glucose metabolism and tissue metabolism [pone.0005978-Ciacciolo1]. Insulin's anabolic effects can also promote tumor growth by the direct stimulation of tumor cell growth. Insulin receptor signaling has been implicated in the increased risk of cancer following type 2 diabetes. In fact, the risk of cancer in type 2 diabetics is nearly twice that of non-diabetics [pone.0005978-Steinmetz1], [pone.0005978-Ahmed1]. The growth of pancreatic tumor cells \*in vitro\* in the absence of insulin is slow. This growth is rapidly and exponentially stimulated by 1 nM insulin, however the growth rate decreases with higher concentrations of insulin. This growth inhibitory effect of high insulin concentration suggests a potential synergy between insulins on the tumor cell growth. Insulin-receptor induced insulin secretion from  $\beta$ -cells directly stimulates cancer growth. High insulin concentrations increase the rate of pancreatic tumor growth. In addition, high insulin levels trigger and increase the growth of existing pancreatic tumors. The limitation of our current study is that we have not tested the effect of insulin on tumors that are already established \*in vivo\*. For this reason, we were unable to determine if higher insulin concentrations trigger the growth of existing pancreatic cancer. Future studies are warranted to address this issue. In another study we have examined the effect of high insulin on tumor growth in non-diabetic xenografts of pancreatic cancer cells. (Gelmani Y. et al. FASEB J., in press). Our data demonstrate that chronic high insulin levels may be the cause for the increased risk of pancreatic cancer in type 2 diabetics. Further studies are required to determine if high insulin levels are a secondary result of the tumor growth or may actually trigger the tumor growth. \*\*Competing Interests:\*\*The authors have declared that no competing interests exist. \*\*Funding:\*\*This research was supported by grants from 0cc13bf012

This year, I've been stalking folks whose trees I saw in your photos on Facebook. I've decided that, as a true Vermonter, I want a tree that comes from Vermont (because I would much rather support the local economy than the 30 percent markup at the Walmart in town). So if you don't mind, I'm going to add your festive photos in the comments section on this post. You can buy your own evergreen from this local tree lot. Happy Thursday! (I didn't include photos of the Magnolia, the tree we put in the yard in February. Since it's been plowed up and buried in snow for months, I think I'll put those photos somewhere else and call it a day. The photos of the cookies in the picture below are compliments of my mother-in-law, who baked about a million of these at her pottery studio!) 7 thoughts on "The Christmas Trees

It is produced by BigThe American Civil Liberties Union on Thursday told the Senate's Privacy and Technology Subcommittee that Americans want better control over how their information is used by businesses, and encouraged lawmakers to pass legislation meant to curb Internet abuse. Sen. Al Franken (D-Minn.), the subcommittee's chairman, said he wants to ensure that if companies collect data from Americans, they give consumers control over it. That would force businesses to explain how they use the data and to clarify how it could be used against users. According to the ACLU's Web site, "A person's most sensitive personal data, such as medical or bank records, are often shared with third parties without consent, without effective controls, or with inadequate controls. This often occurs without disclosure or notice to the individuals affected. This information is often highly sensitive and valuable, and the privacy of all Americans who interact with these third parties is at risk.
