Questions You Should Ask Your Capstone Advisor 7 Questions to Ask Your Capstone Advisor Author: Mitchell Sell 16 Nov 2017

When you get accepted to a capstone project, your advisor typically gives you a deadline for the project to complete. Although the deadline is likely inevitable, take this time to ask your capstone advisor a few questions to make sure you're ready for the project. How long have you been working on your capstone project? Capstone projects are more personal than many other senior theses, and that comes with pros and cons, but you're currently at the disadvantage. If you're struggling to meet the deadline your advisor set, you may have trouble juggling other coursework. Make sure that your project is going to be the most efficient assignment you can handle. Do you have a thesis statement? Just because a capstone project is more personal than research projects, doesn't mean there isn't an overarching course of action. Anything from an in-depth reading analysis to a creative "thesis" can be defined. Even if you don't specifically plan for the project to have a thesis statement, define what the project is addressing. This will help you decide what you'll do more research on, what ideas you'll take on, and what type of approach you'll use. How much time do you think I need to plan? Really plan how you're going to complete your project. A lot can come up in the course of preparing for it, and it's unlikely that you'll have the time to address everything. Whether you need to devote specific time or a couple of days, outline the tasks that you must do to complete the project. You need to make sure to cover the type of writing tasks you need to complete, research you need to complete, and anything else you need to complete. What time do I need to focus on the project? If you've planned in a reasonable amount of time, you should be able to get the bulk of the work done in that time. However, you still have to provide the necessary context to the project, so while you can get about 100% of the work done, you shouldn't
