Technical Field The present invention relates to a developer composition for inkjet recording and to a developer liquid jetting apparatus and an image forming apparatus equipped with this. 2. Related Art Inkjet printers are advantageous in that high-speed printing is possible, printing can be done on plain paper without using any special paper, noise is small, and the like. For these reasons, the use of an inkjet printer is becoming widespread. Inkjet printers print images by spraying droplets of printing ink (developer liquid) from a nozzle toward a target object to be printed. In this case, inks may adhere to the surface of the nozzle due to vibration or the like during printing, or a nozzle may become blocked by drying of the ink. When the nozzle becomes blocked, the ink on the nozzle may come out as a mist (mist) containing ink components, and the ink may adhere to the background of the print target object, causing blurring. In particular, with regard to dark color inks such as black and near-black, bleeding between printed images, and the like, it is particularly difficult to prevent adhesion of ink mist, and the problem of the adhesion of ink mist is pointed out. In order to prevent the adhesion of ink mist during printing, a method of spraying developer liquid onto the surface of the nozzle to form a film of developer liquid on the surface of the nozzle has been proposed. A stable liquid film can be formed by spraying developer liquid onto the surface of the nozzle, and thus the occurrence of blocking of the nozzle can be suppressed. However, if the force of adherence of developer liquid is great, the adhesion of developer liquid is not sufficiently suppressed and thus a stable liquid film may not be formed and the nozzle may become blocked. In order to solve this problem, JP-A-2007-318869 discloses a technology in which a negative pressure is
