Comparison of carboxyl and phosphoric acid treatments for the recovery of bioactive compounds from microalgae. The aim of this study was to compare the efficiency of carboxyl and phosphoric acid treatments (CAT and PAT, respectively) to recover algal compounds (polyunsaturated fatty acids, total lipids, carotenoids, proteins and total phenolics) of Saccharina latissima and Thalassiosira oceanica and to evaluate whether these processes guarantee the quality of the final product. Samples were treated with 20% or 40% carboxyl (12 h; 50°C) or phosphoric acid (8 h; 30°C), the latter in combination with chloroform:methanol:H₂O (1:1:4 v/v) (8 h; 30°C). Total lipids recovered from S. latissima microalgae after treatment with carboxyl and phosphoric acid increased, respectively, by 23% and 53%, while total phenolics and proteins increased by 15% and 28%. Carboxyl and PAT-treated S. latissima presented an IC₅₀ of ca. 0.16 mg of protein/ml and 0.3 mg of lipids/ml, respectively, when the extracts were subjected to an antioxidant activity assay. In contrast, the IC₅₀ for the same species after treatment with carboxyl and phosphoric acid was 0.31 mg of protein/ml and 0.65 mg of lipids/ml, respectively. CAT and PAT treatments were effective in terms of the increase in total phenolics for T. oceanica. Although the polyunsaturated fatty acid content was not affected by treatments, high P and omega-3 index values were achieved. In conclusion, the use of combined acid treatments for the recovery of phenolics and carotenoids from microalgae was a suitable process to obtain compounds with interesting properties. So, I ran into an issue today when I tried to login to the Jenkins instance I'm using to build an OpenJFX app that connects to a SQL Server db. Turns out that the app runs fine on Linux using the JDK installed in the $JAVA_HOME environment variable. On Windows, however, the same app throws a `com.microsoft.sqlserver.jdbc.SQLServerException: Fail to connect to localhost:1527`. I have no idea what's going on here, but here are my

Pro Tips If you need to crop or straighten an image in Photoshop, it's better to make a duplicate of your image before you do anything with it. This way you can add your effects to the original and move the duplicate image behind it. After you've made a selection, you may want to create a transparent layer first in order to blend your image with the other image elements. On the other hand, if you don't want to make a selection, you can paint over your subject and the rest of the image. Then you can adjust the image with the paint or brush tool. If you're using the eraser tool, make sure you erase the whole area you want to erase. If you erase an area of the image that is not transparent, you'll lose the rest of the image under it. If you want to create a new background for a photo, add a small section of the background behind the photograph as a mask. If you want to change the background color, make a layer with the Color Picker and select a new color. People often get confused when first learning to use a program like Photoshop.
