iPhoto iPhoto is Apple's image software, which was introduced with Mac OS X. It can be purchased separately or as part of the Mac OS X operating system. Unlike Photoshop, it is not integrated into the main operating system but is designed to operate independently on any Mac platform. You'll find the program online at www.apple.com/imac/photoshop. iPhoto is fairly intuitive to use because it has a relatively simple interface. It allows you to view, edit, and convert your images using the same basic editing tools as the other programs. Here are some of the common uses for iPhoto: * Viewing images, with customizable display options * Creating slideshows * Creating contact sheets or images for slide shows * Improving images through the iPhoto correction tools * Creating GIFs and editing videos The editing capabilities of iPhoto are fairly limited. If you want to spend more time creating slideshows, or altering images through creative filters, you should consider upgrading to the program that we describe in the following sections.

Q: How can I have email routing from a.mail file in a project in C#? I am trying to write a.mail file to route to an email address, but I keep getting an error that is so generic that it confuses me. I have a.mail file like this: app.AddRule("ruleName", "normal-email-address@example.com", new Repository.EmailStatus() { EmailAddress = "normal-email-address@example.com", Status = Repository.EmailStatus.Suspect }); and a Repository class: public sealed class Repository { public enum EmailStatus { Suspect, Green, Yellow, Red, Deleted } public static EmailStatus GetStatus(string address) { var model = new EmailStatus(); var email = null; switch (address) { case "normal-email-address@example.com": case "business-email-address@example.com": email = "normal"; break; case "consumer-email-address@example.com": email = "normal"; break; case "bad-email-address@example.com": email = "bad"; break; case "other-email-address@example.com": email = "other";

Q: Is there a way to make JavaScript dynamically reveal the rendered page? In some of my research I found a link to this page. In the page there is an example of using JavaScript to make a specific browser window that is doing a webpage refresh. My question is, is there a way I can have JavaScript do the same thing, to reveal the page that is being "hidden" when the JavaScript is being executed? Thanks! A: Yes. Every HTML page has an element which you can access. If you set some information in the anchor- or form-element that the uses as its src-attribute then you can just "scroll" through the . Here is a simple demo: Spy browser and scroll on page load!
