Leaders call for 'humility' in new Trump administration By Betty Bellemare Staff writer Sunday Mar 13, 2017 at 12:01 AM Mar 13, 2017 at 4:10 PM WASHINGTON — Leaders of mainline Protestant, Catholic and Orthodox churches spoke out Friday about the divide that surfaced during last year's presidential election, reflecting the religious values that spurred anti-Donald Trump demonstrations across the nation. At a gathering of religious leaders in Washington, the Rev. Billy Graham called for the new president to "show humility" and refrain from saying or doing things that would further divide the country. "In the days ahead, it will be critical that we see our nation heal rather than harden, open our arms rather than stifle free and open exchange," Graham said. "If we do that, we could rebuild the core of our nation, the values that built our nation." Some of the groups that have been deeply opposed to Trump's policies on matters of religious liberty, gun rights and social issues also represented at Friday's service called for "healing and reconciliation." "A great deal of harm has already been done in this past year and a great deal more can be undone," said the Rev. Eileen Lindner, president of Americans United for Separation of Church and State. Church leaders who attended the service said they wanted to embrace the president's calls for unity. But their insistence on that message did not necessarily reflect the frustration of many people in the audience. "To me, it's not a question about what they do. It's a question about what they say," said the Rev. John "Jay" Kenneson, a retired Baltimore pastor and member of the National Association of Evangelicals.
