For example, the sword that can be put on it and the shadow monsters, the equipment drops or the item...Q: Cannot get LAN IP using Java I have a machine running CentOS 5.5 and Java 1.6.0. I need to be able to get its IP address in my code. Currently I am trying to ping with a simple ping but I get back "Destination host unreachable" every time. I have tried using the ipconfig command and set of ifconfig and netstat commands to see if any of the answers to this would work but they don't. The Java can ping my other computers on the same LAN just fine. Any ideas? Thanks in advance Edit: I am trying to do this from an app I am writing on the same machine. I am using the InetAddress.getLocalHost() method to get the current IP from it. The code I am using to ping the machine is as follows: try { InetAddress addr = InetAddress.getLocalHost(); String hostName = addr.getHostName(); System.out.println("Address is " + hostName + " at " + addr.getHostAddress()); String ipAddrStr; int index = hostName.indexOf(".");

Phospholipid priming of tumor necrosis factor- $\alpha$ : role of phosphatidylcholine-cholesterol metabolism. Tumor necrosis factor (TNF) production from human monocytes is known to be primed by synthetic phospholipids, such as phosphatidylcholine (PC) and phosphatidylethanolamine (PE). The process of PC priming involves a dramatic down-regulation of membrane sphingomyelinase activity, and a slow disassociation of the cellular enzymes sphingomyelin phosphodiesterase and sphingomyelin synthase. Cholesterol (Ch) enhances these effects, and inhibits TNF production from both PC- and PE-primed monocytes. Here we examine the effect of different Ch metabolites on these same processes and TNF production. Our results indicate that Ch metabolites have different effects on TNF production from PC-primed monocytes, depending on whether Ch is preincubated with the cells. The dihydrosterols, 25-hydroxycholesterol, 25-hydroxy-9Z-octadecenol, and 7-ketocholesterol inhibit the priming process and secretion of TNF from PC-primed monocytes. Although 25-hydroxycholesterol and 25-hydroxy-9Z-octadecenol inhibited TNF synthesis from both PC-primed and PE-primed monocytes, 7-ketocholesterol was inhibitory only to TNF production from PE-primed monocytes. None of the metabolites examined changed the kinetics of the priming effect. Together, our results provide evidence that the metabolic relationship between Ch and PC in the plasma membrane and in endosomal membranes plays a critical role in determining TNF production from human monocytes. We're looking for a direct join
