xcode 4 — learning (learning ios development) i was wondering whether to learn objective c or swift for ios development. currently i am using both, with some xcode projects for practice and learning purposes. i went with swift because the language is so similar to java which is what i am used to. then again, i am a begginer when it comes to ios development, and maybe i just don't know enough about objective c yet. so what do you guys think? what would you recommend? ps: i am a starter on so, so bear with me please. a: i would recommend learning both. you'll come across swift and objective-c everywhere and you'll see why when you look at each language in action. i've just started learning swift and it's really no different from objective-c, just with more features. also, you'll use swift in the app store and objective-c for in-house application development. so there's always a swift and an objective-c project you will be working on :) q: passing an argument to a subroutine in perl how to pass a perl argument to a subroutine in perl? i need to pass an argument to a subroutine. i tried the following code, but it didn't work: sub read { my $fh; open($fh, "$file") or die $!; print "writer is called "; } getopts('type', \my $type); open(my $fh, '
