the mission is to deliver fresh, unique, high quality, and appropriate content to readers. to share your stories you simply need to register and follow this guide: actions>add story> next steps> publish important: your list of satellites you've seen does not have to cover them all. you'll need to search the internet, geolookup, talk to your local newspaper for news of the satellite, or just make up some other information. the spectrum consists of a unique and powerful electron beam (electron) that is pulsed at unprecedented frequencies, which are used to measure the duration of the signal, determine the frequency of the signal, and determine the distance of the signal. while the google team you're talking to is typically not allowed to have input on search results, they may be able to report some of what you've observed from geolookup, and as you've mentioned the satellite you're talking to. the enterprise satellite tracking system (ests) program is a series of small satellites developed by nasa's goddard space flight center. these satellites can be launched on existing expendable launch vehicles, such as the atlas v and delta iv in a geosynchronous orbit. an onboard laser system measures the distance between the satellite and the earth, and a ground system uses the distance to determine the position of the spacecraft. this system enables us to track a spacecraft during its entire mission even when the satellite is outside the range of ground tracking equipments.
