if you installed, wsfc.exe or one of its child processes manually to register a microsoft exchange server, you will need to do it again. windows 10, version 2004 has an internal wsfc.exe process that makes managing all the wsfc.exe processes in the system easier. if you install this version of windows 10, there is a boot issue with the wsfc.exe service. you can't boot after installing this version of windows 10, version 2004. attaching the default 16.0 gb boot partition, build 1511 will install a boot image of windows by starting at the boot partition. however, some booting issues have occurred when the os drive is not the root volume drive. windows and windows server devices can be configured to support up to two languages. you also can use a single local version of the msi as the setup and repair language. for example, you have setup and repair language for spanish, but a customer needs to have their english language localized. for windows server, the above steps apply to a target computer that has an upgrade from windows server 2008, unless you specifically used a language pack that was installed with the computer. you can't reuse the same msi for both windows installation and language updates on a windows server device. if you need to use the windows device key, you will need to use the setup program or inventory to obtain the key that matches the pc. you should use the product key from the current installation of windows. if you need to run more than four domains on windows server, you will need to use active directory federation services (ad fs) 2.1 or later on windows server to run as a principal. you will need to add a new certification authority to the trusted root certification authorities store on the target computer.
