LT1021. The maximum drain current of the LT1021 is 20mA, while the current draw of the Zener diode is 15mA. This means that the LT1021 will require a 10,000 uF capacitor. Is it possible to do this safely with the LT1021? What is the maximum drain current of the LT1021? EDIT: The Zener diode will require an external resistor to limit the peak current for safety. A: Adding a 10 K or 3500 uF inductor in series with the Zener diode will limit the current to about 5mA (R_{ZD}/I_{RDIV}) where R_{ZD} is the R_{dson} of the Zener. You will not be able to turn the FET off using a low-side switch though. You'll have to make sure the FET gate is either connected to ground by your supply or at least has a pull-up resistor or gate resistor. If you leave the FET off the current will rise until the gate or source voltage becomes excessive and the FET starts turning on, producing a higher-than-spec IR drop. The profile of psychological response to mental health reform: findings from the UK mental health reform project. This paper draws on the authors' recent research on the expectations, processes and experiences of psychological support for people affected by mental health reform in the UK. The study was an area-wide qualitative investigation of the form of psychological support offered by health care professionals, the expectations and experiences of care received, and the social and personal dynamics involved in service use. Thirty case studies were located from a random sample of those services designated 'ready for transfer' and ten from a sample of those service users for whom reform was not recommended.

Interviews with carers, service users and key staff were undertaken 79a2804d6b
