Photoshop can make use of an incredible spectrum of filters. Basic ones include Sharpen, Blur, Colorize, B&W, Distort, and Sepia. There are an astonishing number, including Noise Reduction, Linear Burn, Gradate, and others. The more you apply, the more you can control. If you find one that you like, you can add it to a preset, saving your work for later. As with the filters, Photoshop's pen pokes seem to be getting puns for causes beyond my ken; one is Color Splash. For those interested in Web apps, one large new feature is WebWorks. You can view any website in Photoshop, which opens in Firefox. You can abbreviate pages with Ctrl+Enter, which copies and inserts the page, or double-click the shortcut key to expand the fonts. There's even a way to page through a Twitter or Facebook feed if you get it going, by pressing Ctrl/Option-Alt-up-arrow on the Mac or Option-Down-arrow on Windows. The new Linked Cloud Documents tool enables you to work on PSDs over the web in collaboration with colleagues. You can open and edit a PSD online, and, if the file is opened in the web browser, it will automatically save or open a web-hosted version of the file. You can also post comments in the web-hosted version of the file and post links to the file on social media. Layer Collage via Photoshop Generator
This offers collage or grouping pixels layers into one - a great way to make images from one seamless. For photographers, this is extremely beneficial if you are working on a limited photo with similar color patterns, texture, etc.
